For more than forty years there has been printed in Greenland a newspaper with the tongue-twisting title of Atuagagdlintit, which, being interpreted, as Something for Reading. The news it publishes relates mainly to the perils of the men who ply the kyaks, or native anoes, while engaged in seal, walrus, and white bear hunting, with now and again glimpses of the happenings in more civilized lands. News travels to a great extent through the chance meetings of the natives with travelers from other regions.
